Introduction

In paragraph form write a proper introduction that should include an attention getting sentence followed by a thesis. Next there should be a preview of points (concept you selected, a relationship you are in, and what you have learned). This should be one paragraph but no more than two paragraphs.

Interpersonal Concept

This section should include information about your concept. This section should have in text citations. When you find information rewrite it in YOUR own words and after the sentence tell me where you found the information (example Cooley, 2018) if it is an exact quote you should use (example Cooley, 2018, p. 14). This portion should be at least three paragraphs and include at least two to four sources, don't forget you must use your textbook.

Relationship

This sections should include a description of the person and your relationship. Include a few brief stories of how you interact with this person. Make sure to tell me both a physical and a social description of the person. In addition tell me how long you have known them and how you met. This portion should be at least three paragraphs.

Synthesis

This section should tell the reader when you see the concept in the relationship. Give examples of interactions that show the concept in real life. Then reflect on what you have learned about the concept, about yourself, and about your relationship. If you want you can include a citation or two in this section – especially if you did not use all of your sources in the first section. A reference can also prove a point. For example using the format: Research states

(source cited) in my relationship I have seen, therefore now I know..... This portion should be at least three paragraphs.

Conclusion

This is your conclusion where you remind the reader of what they have learned in your paper. Make sure to recap your three main points and end with an attention getting sentence. This could be a quote or a story. This portion should be one full paragraph but no more than two paragraphs.

References

In this section you will list the sources you used. Below is a guide on how to cite in APA format. Keep in mind you must use 4 sources one of them MUST be your textbook. Please use the library data bases. APA sources are cited with a hanging indent which means that the first line is not indented but the ones below each source are indented. Most of the online data bases accessed through the library will do the APA citation for you. If you can't figure that out ask me or the librarian for some assistance. List all of your sources in alphabetical order on your reference page. Keep in mind that your reference page does not count toward the four full pages of text required, neither does the cover page. The references should always be on their OWN page. Do not add them to the end of your text – put in a page break then type in your references.
